Early poster from 1972, pencil. Produced for an 8mm film I shot on a ping pong table in my parents garage.

Introduction

In Lawrence, Kansas, some of the most memorable art hasn't hung quietly inside museums — it's been taped to walls, stapled to kiosks, or layered thick on downtown telephone poles. For decades, if something loud, strange, funny, or unforgettable was about to happen, there was a good chance Joel Sanderson was behind the poster for it. This book gathers those posters and flyers — not just as graphic design, but as a living record of a town's creative pulse.

Sanderson is originally from Wichita, Kansas, where he spent his early years immersed in art, music, and experimentation. He attended Wichita High School South and later studied at Wichita State University, experiences that shaped both his technical skills and his appetite for offbeat, independent culture. Wichita gave him his footing — Lawrence gave him a long-running stage.

Long before social media feeds and digital promotions, getting people to show up meant making something they couldn't ignore. You drew it by hand. You cut and pasted images together. You ran stacks through a copy machine and hoped the toner held out. Sanderson came up in that era, and that do-it-yourself mindset never left his work.

The early flyers have a raw, immediate energy. Hand-lettered type leans and stretches across the page. Collaged photos collide with thick black illustration. High-contrast images push the limits of reproduction, often produced on customized copier machines. These pieces weren't designed to be precious — they were meant to get attention fast. They advertised concerts, film screenings, art openings, underground happenings, and community events. Once the date passed, the poster's job was technically done.
But the work didn't disappear.

Over time, one commission led to another. The WSU or Marple Theater's film series needed new artwork every month. Bands wanted something louder, weirder, sharper than last time. Without setting out to document anything, Sanderson began building a visual timeline of decades of creative life. Flip through these pages, and you can track shifts in music, design trends, and local culture. The posters become markers — snapshots of specific nights and the crowds who showed up.

As technology evolved, so did the process. Paste-up layouts eventually shared space with digital tools. Computer design entered the mix. But even when screens replaced the drawing table, the work kept its handmade bite. Bold line work, playful distortion, and off-center humor remained part of the DNA. There's always a sense that a real person made this for a real room full of people.

That same restless energy extends beyond print. Under the name Demolition Kitchen, Sanderson has produced experimental audio and video work that carries a similar spirit — layered, rhythmic, unpredictable, and rooted in collage thinking. Just as his posters combine image and type in unexpected ways, Demolition Kitchen blends sound and visuals into immersive pieces that feel handmade and immediate. The mediums shift, but the approach is consistent: build something from what's at hand, push it until it sparks, and share it with an audience.

What makes a poster work? It has to stop you mid-step. It has to set a mood before you even read the details. Sanderson's designs often hit first as movement and contrast — bold blacks, dynamic figures, compressed type — and only afterward reveal the date, venue, and fine print. There's usually a visual joke tucked somewhere, a small surprise that rewards a second look.

Gathered together, the volume of work is striking. Some pieces are dense and chaotic; others are stripped down and direct. Some lean heavily on illustration, others on typography. All of them respond to a specific moment — a show, a screening, an opening — and carry the energy of anticipation.

It's easy to think of posters as temporary. They're made to announce, not to last. But when you collect decades of them, something else becomes clear. They form an archive of participation — proof that people kept making things, gathering, experimenting, and inviting others in.

Joel Sanderson's posters didn't just advertise events in Kansas. They helped shape how those events felt before anyone walked through the door. Alongside his audio and video work as Demolition Kitchen, they show an artist committed to staying active, curious, and hands-on.

This book is a stack of those efforts — bold, imperfect, alive — and an invitation to look closely at the art that once lived on the wall, just long enough to pull you inside.

THE EBERLY BROTHERS, "Religion is Sex" (Mumbles, PO Box 8312, Wichita, KS 67208): A late-night radio-evangelism show with a difference. Though the Brothers have the molasses-thick preacher's singing voice and the down-home C&W sound, they're not likely to go over big in the Bible Belt. All it will take is one listen to "A Red Dress for Jesus" or "Walking God's Dog" to convince the believers that these boys ain't. (T/MG)

FILM FEST
weekly collections of strange film & cartoons shows run around 50 minutes and are repeated throughout the evening
Shows start at dusk
Schedule of films for August & September
August 23: "Into the Future"
A Variety of film clips showing views of the future from the 40's, 50's & 60's.
August 30: "Brotherhood of Satan"
This is the Escape' drive-in version of this really awful horror film. Starring a bunch of out of work T.V. actors with nothing better to do. We edited the feature down to 40 minutes (from 90) and added in various odd clips. Served with a side order of vintage cartoon.
Sept. 6: "Who's in Charge"
A collection of footage and clips loosely based on a theme of this country of ours.
Sept. 13: "Let's Do Lunch"
A trip back to the grade school lunchroom, with many side entree's.
Sept. 20: "Taking a Test"
The problems one faces in daily life and in school.
Sept. 30: "Homage to Horror"
A look at not only horror film (guest appearance by Christoper Lee), but how scary other things in life are. Like a career in sales, Mr. Whipple or Michael Jackson.

Halloween Special

Freestate Brewery presents:

Free - Movie Night

at 9:00p.m. in the Brewery Beer Hall

-Tonight 3 Scary Movies-

"Hercules in the Haunted World"

This outing finds Hercules in conflict with Christopher Lee as, you guessed it, a vampire. He also goes to Hell, fights an army of zombies, battles with "Procrustis" the rock demon and finds a way to use a conveniently placed boulder to solve any problem. (running time: 55 min.)

"Horrors in Life"

This is the M.T. Pockets version of a "Homage to Horror" which features the "Horrors of the Occult (hosted by Christopher Lee)", the history of the "deadly weed" marijuana, Michael Jackson (before all that surgery he's had), a large assortment of horror previews and just plan bad movie previews. The show begins with one of my own personal horrors... something so frightening that it awakes me in the middle of the night screaming. (running time: 50 min.)

"Brotherhood of Satan"

A film about a small rural town under the hold of Satan, but no one knows why. It follows a typical family who falls into this mess of out of work actors, cheap special effects and enough overacting that would conjure any demon. WARNING: may contain backwards messages and buckets of red paint. (running time: 45 min.)

"School, It's your Job"

A reel of excerpts from old films about going to school. Featuring O.J.Simpson in "Dropping Out" who lectures the viewer on taking responsibility for ones actions, "Alcohol is Dynamite" showing the down fall of a high school musician and a black & white film from the 60's about a young mans problems with a teenage gang (shot in Lawrence).

Darren Brown approaches his third decade as a performer and artist. For the advent of the forthcoming millennium, he has produced an entirely new work of his own, "Nonfiction". While consistent in tone with his earlier works, "Nonfiction" exudes a sophistication in themes and form unparalleled by anything yet released with his name. Brown is joined by Marc Burch of Schloss Tegal on a journey into the collective unconscious, where the most stark realities can be laid bare. "Nonfiction" tells no tales. It simply represents the latest installment in the continuing life and work of one of the most underrated voices in contemporary electronic music.

FRIDAY 11:00 p.m.

Public Access
Channel 99

OnDemand channel 113

The Basement Sublet of Horror
…Is a public access television show from Lawrence, KS, which has also shown in Wichita, KS, Kansas City, KS, Superior, WI, Proctor, MN and in Dayton, Ohio as part of the Horror Host Underground. Every week, Gunther Dedmund, The Film Butcher, takes a horrible film—one that had it coming—and chops away at it until it's reduced to only the absolute minimum necessary to understand what little plot there is. Then, he adds in an educational short, an industrial film, a pinch of the odd luncheon meat—and the result is the condensed version of the film without all the nasty padding and filler we've come to expect from Hollywood, but with a zestymhumor and hilarity we now know as The Basement Sublet of Horror.

Both a parody of the horror host greats such as Ghoulardi, Zacherley, Vampira, The Host & Rodney and others, and a direct successor to those same legendary late night ghouls, Gunther Dedmund takes you on a warped and hilarious journey through films that otherwise might never be seen. This new and innovative approach to editing leads the charge into as yet uncharted realms of television! Each episode is an hour long, including host segments, breaks, spoof newscasts, and hilarious nonsequitur skits that will leave you begging for more! See you in the Basement!
